Garrett had been resting a hand on either side of the boy's waist, so he wouldn't fall off the bench. Now he raised one to ruffle Calvin's decidedly messy hair. "I heard you were under the weather, cowboy," he said. Over Calvin's head, Garrett fixed that McKetrick-blue gaze on Julie and didn't look away for a long moment.

Austin pushed the truck door open. If Garrett tried to touch the poor critter, he'd be bitten for sure. "Come, Shep." Austin said very quietly. Shep sort of slouched around Garrett, then crept over to stand on his hind legs, both front paws resting on the running board of the truck. "Let's go on home," Austin told him.
