Its strength is given as 5376 men, composed of eight infantry battalions: one advance guard or Avantgarde, one life guard or Leib-Bataillon, three light and three line battalions. They were supported by both a horse and foot artillery battery of eight guns each.

Black Brunswickers - Wikipedia

Wellington advocated the view that all cavalry should be capable of doing whatever was required 'be they dressed or armed as they may'. Despite such opinions, the distinction between heavy and light regiments was generally maintained. On the battlefield, the cavalry 's main offensive role was as shock troops, providing a mounted charge.
